The Indian of The Present

His Best Role Is Working Instead of Fighting—Chief Geronimo's Successor on His Farm.

The Indian as a Landowner. Rodman Wanamaker's Proposal of a Big Bronze Red Man For New York Harbor.

Like the poor Indian, is not so poor at the present time as is generally supposed. The white men keep on taking his land, but he has enough left all told to make him quite a landholder, and if he knew better how to make use of it he would not be very badly off. There is where the shoe pinches. Nevertheless the Indian is learning a good deal about taking care of his possessions and surrounding himself with what the white man is accustomed to look upon as all the comforts of home. Just at this time the Indian situation is attracting attention because of the advent in the interior department at Washington of a new commissioner of Indian affairs, of various talked of changes in the Indian policy of the government and of the proposal by Rodman Wanamaker that the red man be honored by the erection of a gigantic statue of him in New York harbor as a sort of companion piece to the renowned statue of Liberty. Mr. Wanamaker, who is a son of John Wanamaker, the famous merchant and former postmaster general, thinks that it would be highly appropriate to erect at the gateway of the country a statue typifying the race which originally possessed the continent, and the movement to carry out the project has gained considerable headway.

It happens that during August several large tracts of Indian land will be distributed among homesteaders by the government. In Idaho 200,000 of the 400,000 acres of the Coeur d'Alene reservation will be opened up to settlement. The tract embraces agricultural, grazing and timber lands. Some 50,000 acres of the Flathead Indian lands in western Montana and 6,000 acres of the Spokane reservation in eastern Washington are to be opened up also in the course of the summer and autumn.

The Indian population of the Coeur d'Alene reservation consists of about 500 Coeur d'Alenes and another hundred Indians who are Spokanes. These people each own 160 acres of land and have 2,500 head of horses, 1,200 cows, 600 hogs and 175 sheep. The wealthiest of the tribe is probably Louis Mitcheata, who is reputed worth about $15,000. He lives in a house which would be no discredit to any farmer in the country and has large barns and outbuildings on his premises.

Many of the Indians of Oklahoma and other states and territories of the southwest are examples of the modern type of red man, who is learning that working rather than fighting is, after all, the role that pays best in the long run. A notable instance of the Indian of this type is Asa Daklugie, who recently succeeded to the chieftainship held by that renowned Apache warrior Geronimo, who died some months ago. When at work in his fields as a man with the hoe Daklugie does not look so very fierce notwithstanding his predecessor as chief was so famous for his bloodthirstiness. Old Geronimo became quite peaceable toward the close of his career, but he always remained proud of the reputation as a tiger in human form which General Nelson A. Miles gave him.

It was in 1885 and 1886 that Miles held his famous Apache hunt. At least twenty pitched battles were fought, and the Indians kept the soldiers constantly on the move or under arms. In the course of the campaign the Apaches repeatedly crossed and recrossed the Mexican border. About the last of August, 1886, they made their final stand in the mountainous region of the Sierras, 300 miles south of the border.

After unsuccessful efforts to compromise with Governor Torres, the Mexican official nearest the trouble, they finally surrendered to the American force, who had an understanding with the Mexican government.

Among those who surrendered were Geronimo, the fiercest enemy that the palefaces had ever known; Natchez and fifteen other chiefs. When the surrender of the whole force of hostiles had been completed the Americans found themselves with nearly 400 men, women and children to care for. President Cleveland and Secretary Lamar agreed that their only possible status was that of prisoners of war, and such they have remained through six administrations.

The imprisonment in the Florida forts was brief. On official recommendation the Apaches were transferred to Fort Sill, Okla., where they still remain. But the remnant of the warriors of the eighties and the young bloods of the tribe yearn for a sight of their former camping grounds, and there is now before President Taft a petition that they be allowed to return to the spot they still regard as home.

That the education of the red man of today along industrial lines is bringing encouraging results is shown in the last annual report of Miss Estelle Reel, superintendent of Indian schools. It gives a significant array of facts as to the useful lives graduates of these schools are leading while earning their own living as farm laborers, tilling their own land, working on railroads or at trades.

This change in conditions is largely due, according to Miss Reel, to the establishment of the policy of giving industrial training the foremost place in the school work. An investigation of the mode of life of students who have been graduated shows that a large majority of them are endeavoring to overcome the environment of camp life. In this connection the condition of the Indians in California is interesting. Few of the red men in southern California receive rations, none receives an annuity, and idle ones are to be found only occasionally. Many of the graduates of government schools are farming their own land or work for their white neighbors.

The thrift of the new generation of Indians is shown at the Grand Junction school, Colorado. This is a non-reservation school. Fifty boys and twenty girls who were instructed in horticulture have saved between $3,000 and $4,000 from the money they obtained for fruit raised by them.

In Idaho the only Indians who draw rations are the old and infirm. The Indians take great pride in their crops and cattle and are supplying all the beef required on some reservations.

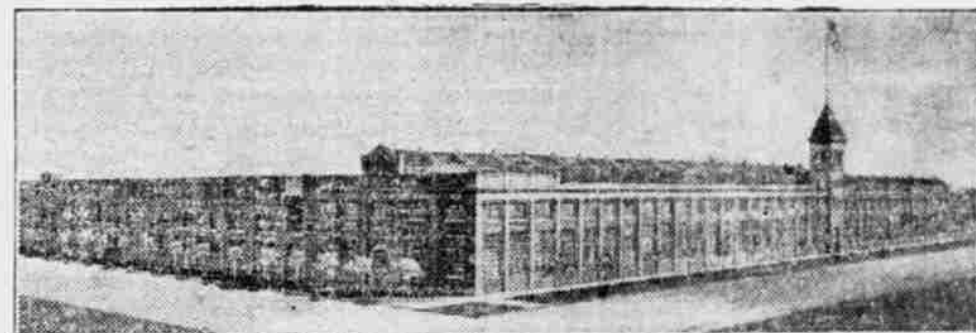

Rodman Wanamaker in proposing that a big bronze red man be placed on guard in New York harbor suggests that when the white man first came to the new world the Indian met his ships. Many of the red men came in kindness and but for wrongs executed by the newcomer would have lived in peace with the white man.

But the page of history has been written. The Indian has gone the way of the buffalo. A memorial of what he once was would seem little more than poetic justice.

With such a statue at the entrance to the harbor of the greatest city of the new world every incoming steamship would come close to where the Indian would stand forth in his native garb, a memory of greatness that once was.

The white man is generally supposed to love the Indian best after he is dead. This would be a dead Indian, indeed, yet the belated honor so paid would show that the hatchet is buried and that perhaps even yet red men and palefaces may dwell together in peace.

Special Lace Exhibit

ZION LACE INDUSTRIES, ZION CITY, ILLINOIS

ZION LACES and many interesting features in their manufacture are on exhibition in one of our show windows. This display is educational and every person should see it.

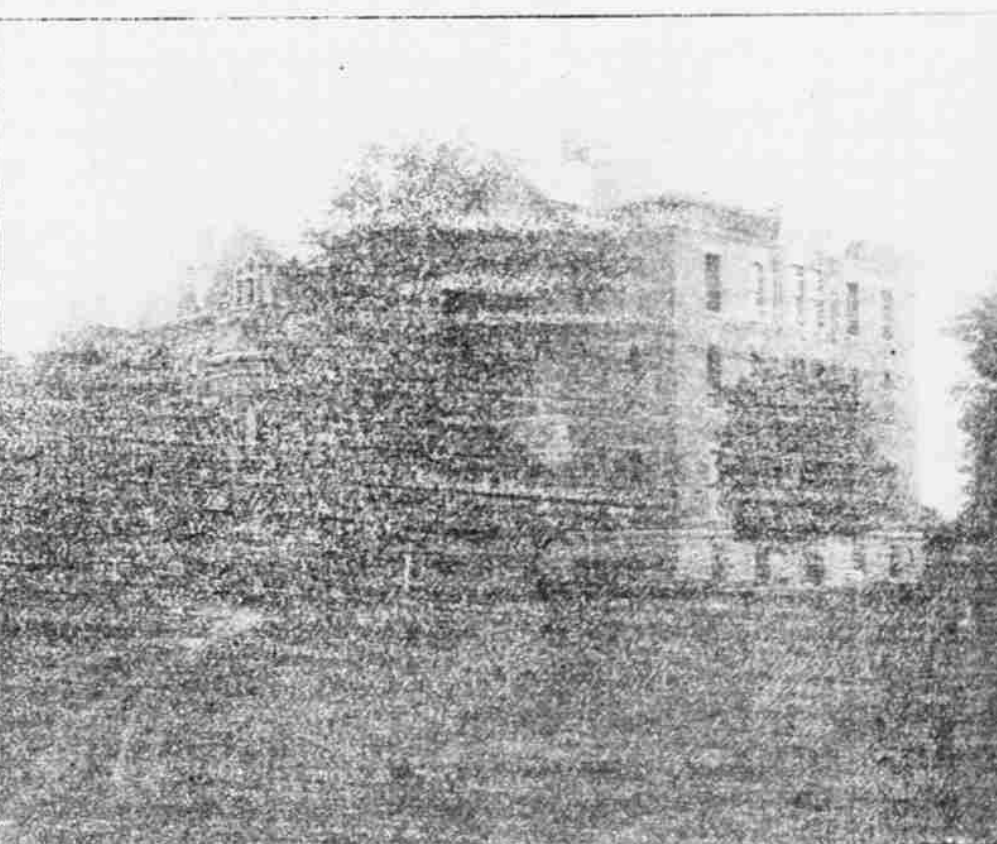

From 3,400 to 4,500 bobbins are required to thread one lace machine, besides the beam and warp, making a total—when the machine is threaded—of 13,000 threads in actual work. When a machine is fully threaded there are 6,700 miles of cotton on it, enough to reach from here to England and nearly back again.

See the illustrations of the various machines in operation—where they take in the thread and turn out the dainty, attractive laces—also skeins of yarns, yarn spools—pieces of lace just as they come from the machines. Especially interesting is the process of clipping, scalloping and separating. The exhibit is so unique and the values so unusual that a visit will be of material interest to you.
